Massachusetts National Guard to Bolster Airport Security

MILFORD, Mass. -- The Massachusetts National Guard received a mission from Governor Mitt Romney to bolster airport security in the commonwealth today.

"We've done this mission before, and we're ready to do it again," said Brig. Gen. Oliver J. Mason, The Adjutant General of the Massachusetts National Guard.

The Massachusetts National Guard helped secure the commonwealth's airports after Sept. 11, 2001 and continued the mission until the spring of 2002.

Details of the current mission are still being developed between the Massachusetts National Guard and other public safety authorities.
